Of course, there is science to aromatherapy. Essential oils are derived from plants and are considered to be all natural, just like any molecule.

BLESSED

CANCER CARE AND AROMATHERAPY

---

Cancer patients, who often experience high volumes of concentrated chemicals running through their bodies, can find hope in the potential benefits of aromatherapy. Essential oils can be one of the safest options to manage the caustic effects of chemotherapy and are significantly beneficial in their everyday regimen. And of course, there is science to aromatherapy.

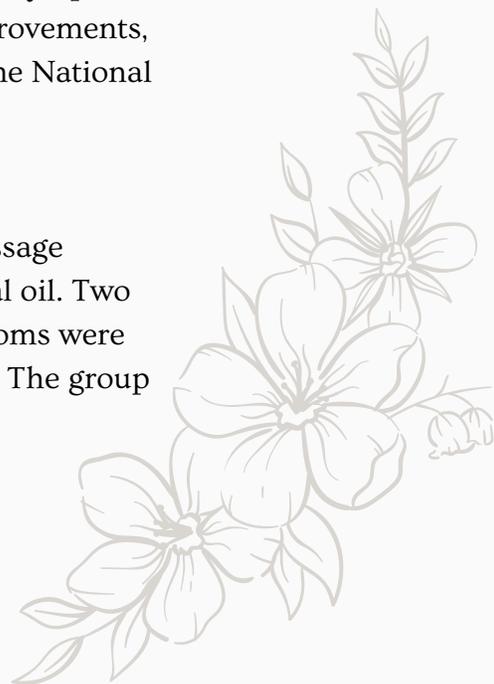

St. Michael Patient Care and Caregivers' Wellness Blends are blended based on their therapeutic properties. The therapeutic uses listed for each essential oil are those that are relevant to the purpose of this particular blend. It's important to note that this information is not intended to diagnose, treat, cure, or prevent any disease, ensuring that you, as the reader, are well-informed.

Clinical trials of aromatherapy have studied its use in the treatment of anxiety, nausea, vomiting, and other health-related conditions in cancer patients. (National Cancer Institute )

In a 1999 randomized controlled trial, researchers compared the effects of standard massage and aromatherapy massage in 103 cancer patients. The group that received the aromatherapy massage with Roman chamomile essential oil reported a significant reduction in anxiety and an improvement in symptoms. In contrast, the massage-only group showed some improvements, but they weren't statistically significant, according to the National Cancer Institute.

STUDIES ON ANXIETY AND DEPRESSION

A trial of 103 cancer patients studied the effects of massage compared to massage with Roman chamomile essential oil. Two weeks later, a decrease in anxiety and improved symptoms were noted in the group that had massage with essential oil. The group that had a massage did not have the same benefit.
